Presenting your Ideas

EMOTIONAL ARC OF A PRESENTATION

Below is the ideal emotional arc of the audience for your presentation. If you are setting the context of the problem and then presenting the solution effectively, your presentation should first build concern in your audience, not just for the big picture but also specific people. When you present your idea, the mood ideally will change to one of hope. As you make your case for why your idea will work, your audience's feeling of hope should continue to grow. Once you have built that hope, capitalize on the feelings you have generated by giving a call to action. Leave the audience on an aspirational high note.

Also included below the different topics included in an effective presentation as well as suggestions for sources of evidence and visuals. Finally, suggested timing is also included. Good luck!
